

Dr. Videsh Kapoor
Director of Global Health
Department of Family Practice, Faculty of Medicine
University of British Columbia, Canada

Community-Based Service Learning Projects in Medical Education: Development, Implementation, Assessment

Service learning programs provide a valuable opportunity for students to engage with and learn from community partners. Programs can occur both locally and globally and require significant planning, supervision, and evaluation to achieve successful outcomes:

- ethical engagement with community partners and sustainable benefit to populations served
- deliver a meaningful learning experience for students
- contribute to the achievement of core academic competencies and objectives

This workshop will be an interactive discussion sharing examples of service learning global health projects, best practices and challenges of designing, implementing, and evaluating impacts of these projects and how these can be linked directly to learning goals and objectives of your curricular program.