Workshop 3 – Admissions

What Student do You Want in Your Program?

Abstract:

Professors Wilson and Griffin draw on their experience in student selection for both undergraduate and graduate medical programs to present a workshop on how to develop a comprehensive admissions process that includes a multiple mini interview. The workshop will begin by providing you with information on what issues need to be considered in the design of an admissions system. We then focus on designing a multiple mini interview. This includes the selection of qualities to be assessed, options for station content, evaluating questions for potential bias, and developing rating scales. Participants will work in small groups to design a station and learn how to critique its suitability for different types of applicants.
